precious young girl."

On Friday morning, about the time Walton County sheriff's deputies were charging Cozzie with Courtney's murder, Alexander opened the doors of the high school to some of Courtney's closest friends.

The students talked with grief counselors and each other and began hanging hand-printed posters about Courtney outside the school.

The posters quickly grew into a makeshift memorial; candles, trinkets, flowers and cards stacked up. Several black and white cow-print balloons were hung in honor of Courtney's beloved bovine pet.

The soccer team plans to wear their jerseys to Courtney's funeral Wednesday. The school will retire Courtney's No. 14 jersey.

"I would have never thought something like this could have happened to her," Pace said. "She was just a good person, too good for anything bad to happen to her."

Comments from the Apalachicola Riverkeeper and the Biomass Accountability Project, an organization of which Sheehan is the attorney, were deemed to be not specific to the draft air permit conditions and therefore were not addressed in the final action.

The request for an administrative hearing from the Help Save the Apalachicola Group, Inc. was noted only as being withdrawn.

A Tallahassee attorney representing several local residents submitted a letter indicating they intended to file an administrative complaint with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency if the permit was issued based on the assertion that a disparate number of minority residents would suffer air quality impacts from the project.

The DEP stated in response that the agency did not agree with the assertions in the letter, noted that two of the individuals filing the challenge were involved with Help Save the Apalachicola Group, Inc., which withdrew a petition for administrative hearing and did not include comments or recommendations regarding the specific draft permit conditions.

Another letter, from the general counsel of the NAACP, also alleging that air quality would be disparately impacted for minorities, was answered by the DEP in similar fashion.

The agency stated it did not agree that minority neighborhoods would be disproportionately affected, noted that there were no recommendations or comments specific to the draft air permit conditions and further stated that the emissions from the project fall short of the federal program concerning construction of major stationary sources of air pollution, also known as Prevention of Significant Deterioration.

The Port St. Joe project would be the first commercial-scale project to use Rentech's SilvaGas gasifier system, touted by the company as an advance in the biomass industry.

Officials with Rentech, have said woody biomass for the Northwest Florida Renewable Energy Center, would come exclusively from forest residue, or that left behind after logging operations.

The $225 million NWFREC, to be constructed in Port St. Joe on a former coal transfer site, is estimated to generate 180-200 jobs during the 18-month construction timeline with 85-100 permanent jobs generated at the plant and through the fuel production pipeline.

Rentech has a purchase agreement in place to sell electricity from the plant to Progress Energy.

> The agency stated it did not agree that minority neighborhoods would be disproportionately affected, noted that there were no recommendations or comments specific to the draft air permit conditions and further stated that the emissions from the project fall short of the federal program concerning construction of major stationary sources of air pollution, also known as Prevention of Significant Deterioration.

Police: Shoplifter fatally shoots self in head at Kmart

A man police said was trying to steal batteries and soda from a Tampa Bay-area Kmart shot and killed himself after being detained by security guards.

The incident happened just after 3 p.m. Saturday in Bayonet Point.

A Pasco County sheriff's spokesman said the 52-year-old Port Richey man was brought to an office at the back of the store after being caught trying to shoplift items valued at $39.

While being questioned, police said he brandished a .22-caliber handgun and fired it at the doorway.

Two workers ran from the room, and then the man shot himself in the head. He later was pronounced dead.

His identity has not been released.

Fifty-four-year-old Steven Zollman of Longwood underwent surgery Friday at Florida Hospital Orlando to give his 24-year-old son, Brian, one of his kidneys.

The son is a recent graduate of the University of Central Florida. He has had kidney problems throughout his life, and a year ago his doctors decided he needed a transplant.

His father was the first person tested and was found to be a suitable donor.

Smokestacks toppled to make way for power plant

Two 300-foot-tall smokestacks have been toppled to make way for a new South Florida power plant.

The smokestacks at Florida Power and Light's plant in Riviera Beach were brought down Sunday morning with a series of blasts.

The 1960s-era, oil-fired units are being replaced with a new $1.3 billion natural gas-fired power plant. Construction is expected to begin next spring and completed in 2014.

Second Mormon temple planned in Florida

Mormons in South Florida gathered to celebrate what will become only the second Mormon temple in the state.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints held a groundbreaking ceremony Saturday at the Davie site. The temple is expected to be completed in two years and serve about 25,000 people.

Temples differ from ordinary Mormon chapels. They are considered houses of God and are used for occasions like weddings and baptisms.

The first Mormon temple built in the state is in Orlando.

Low water levels increase risk to manatees

Florida wildlife officials are urging boaters in North Florida to be extra vigilant about protecting manatees.

Drought conditions have made water levels on the Santa Fe River exceptionally low. That means boaters and the endangered marine mammals are sharing a limited amount of water.

Officials with the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission ask that boaters scan the water around them for signs of manatees — swirls, mud trails, snouts or tails. Then if they think they have spotted one, boaters are urged to give it plenty of room because it may not be alone.

Teachers union sues over pension changes

TALLAHASSEE (AP) — Florida's statewide teachers union is taking the lead in a lawsuit that seeks to block a requirement for teachers, state workers and many local government employees to contribute 3 percent of their pay to the state pension fund.

The suit filed Monday also challenges a phase-out of cost-of-living increases in retirement benefits.

The Florida Education Association filed the class action on behalf of 11 government workers representing several unions in state circuit court here against what FEA President Andy Ford called "essentially an income tax" on public employees. The Florida Police Benevolent Association immediately filed a motion on behalf of an Orange County sheriff's deputy and a state correctional officer to join the suit.

The Florida Retirement System covers 655,000 active employees and provides benefits to 219,000 retirees.

The suit alleges the contribution requirement and benefit reduction violate existing public employees' contract rights that date back to a law passed in 1974 and which are guaranteed by the Florida Constitution.

"We believe that a promise is a promise and the state of Florida should abide by promises it makes," Ford said.

The suit, though, does not challenge the state's ability to impose the changes on workers hired after the new pension law goes into effect on July 1.

It also alleges the law violates a state constitutional provision that guarantees employees the right to bargain collectively. The Republican-controlled Legislature passed the law without negotiating with public employee unions.

Gov. Rick Scott, who had sought an even larger 5 percent contribution, said he was confident the law will stand up in court.

"Asking state employees to pay a small percentage into their pensions is common sense," the Republican governor said in a statement. "Floridians who don't work in government are required to pay into their own retirement. This is about fairness for those who don't have government jobs. Plus, we are ensuring a pension will be there for state employees when they retire."

The suit, though, won applause from Florida House Democratic Leader Ron Saunders of Key West. He said House Democrats "fought this unconstitutional attempt to balance the state budget on the backs of our public servants."

The employee contributions will not be used to strengthen the pension plan, which is rated as one of the nation's best-funded. Instead, they will be offset by equal reductions in employer contributions. That is expected to save the state and local governments $1.2 billion the first year.

At least one public employer in Pensacola, though, is not taking the savings. Escambia County is giving its employees a 3.1 percent pay raise to offset the pension contributions.

The suit was filed on behalf of two teachers from Hillsborough and Columbia counties, a pair of school maintenance workers from Leon and Madison counties, two Santa Rosa County sheriff's deputies, a Hillsborough Community College staffer, a Hillsborough County solid waste worker and three employees of the Jackson Health System in Miami-Dade County.

The plaintiffs are members of FEA, local teachers unions, the Fraternal Order of Police, the AFL-CIO, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees and the Service Employees International Union-Health Care Florida Local 1991.

The suit names Scott as a defendant along with Attorney General Pam Bondi and Chief Financial Officer Jeff Atwater, all members of the State Board of Administration, as well as Department of Management Services Secretary John Miles. The board oversees pension fund investments and Miles administers the plan.

FEA lawyer Ron Meyer said he expects the case to wind up in the Florida Supreme Court regardless of how it is decided at the trial court level.

The plaintiffs have asked Circuit Judge Jackie Fulford to order the state set aside the employee contributions in an interest-bearing account until the issue is resolved. The employees then could be reimbursed with interest if they win.

The suit is the first of what might be several by the teachers union challenging what Ford called "reckless legislation that was dreamed up by legislative leaders and heartily endorsed by our governor."

Meyer said "it would be a fair statement to say we will be litigating" portions of a new law affecting teacher pay and work conditions. It sets up a merit pay system based heavily on how much each teacher's students improve on standardized tests and eliminates tenure for new hires.

Ford said the Republican-controlled Legislature made "the state of Florida a colder and harsher state" by passing such laws instead of trying to fix the state's economy.

5 still in running for education chief

TAMPA (AP) — Virginia's education secretary is among five finalists to head Florida's school system.

Anthony jury back in courtroom after 1-day delay

ORLANDO (AP) — A forensic botanist testified Tuesday that 2-year-old Caylee Anthony's remains could have been in the woods for as little as two weeks when they were discovered in December 2008, a much shorter time period than prosecutors allege.

As the murder trial of Caylee's mother Casey entered Day 24, the defense witness told jurors she believed the roots could have grown through the bones, skull and a laundry bag in just two weeks.

Jane Bock said she based her estimate "because of the pattern of leaf litter" she observed on photos of the scene in the woods where the remains were found. But Bock said she couldn't tell just by looking at the photos how long the plants in the area had been there.

Prosecutor Jeff Ashton seized on that uncertainty in his cross-examination and noted that photos Bock relied on to make her assessment weren't taken until February 2009, more than seven weeks after the area was cleared of vegetation. He also showed Bock photos taken at the time of recovery and challenged her with more questions.

"Clearly some of those leaves have been off the trees for longer than two weeks, were they not?" Ashton said.

Bock replied it was possible, but also said they could have been there longer.

Anthony is charged with first-degree murder in the death of her 2-year-old daughter. She faces a possible death sentence if convicted and has pleaded not guilty.

Judge Belvin Perry also ruled that defense DNA expert Richard Eikelenboom would not be permitted to testify about decomposition evidence found in the trunk of Casey Anthony's car until a hearing was held. The judge said the defense violated his pretrial order that all expert witnesses present detailed reports about what they planned to testify to. Perry agreed with the prosecution's argument that the report he provided was only a summary.

"That should give each side ample opportunity to do what they need to do," Perry said. "And it is a remedy short of exclusion."

The judge, however, did accept Eikelenboom as an expert in general DNA analysis.

The trial resumed after a one-day delay. The defense and prosecution teams were admonished by Perry on Monday for their constant bickering. The judge abruptly recessed court and the jury never entered the courtroom.
