SUMMARY ANALYSIS

HB 1273 with committee substitute creates the "Senator Howard Futch Act". The committee substitute provides that if an offender is sentenced to community control by the court and the offender is statutorily ineligible to be placed on community control because of forcible felony convictions, the Department of Corrections must inform the sentencing judge, the State Attorney and the Attorney General that the offender was ineligible.

The committee substitute also requires DOC to provide a quarterly report to the chief judge and state attorney of each circuit on the number of ineligible offenders placed on community control within that circuit as well as an annual report on this issue to the Senate, House of Representatives and Florida Supreme Court.

The committee substitute requires DOC to develop and maintain a weighted statewide caseload equalization strategy designed to ensure that high-risk offenders receive the highest level of supervision. The committee substitute requires DOC to include specified information relating to community control in its annual report. The committee substitute also requires DOC to study and report on the use of electronic monitoring and its effectiveness on the community control population.

B. EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES:

Community Control: The term “community control” is defined in statute¹ as follows:

‘Community control’ means a form of intensive, supervised custody in the community, including surveillance on weekends and holidays, administered by officers with restricted caseloads. Community control is an individualized program in which the freedom of an offender is restricted within the community, home, or noninstitutional residential placement and specific sanctions are imposed and enforced.

Because community control requires a higher level of supervision than probation, a correctional probation officer is statutorily prohibited² from having more than 25 community controllees on his or her caseload. As of November 30, 2002, there were approximately 10,330 offenders on community control.

Section 948.03, F.S. contains a list of terms and conditions that a judge can impose upon an offender placed on community control. If a judge finds that an offender has violated a condition, the judge may revoke, modify or continue the community control.³ If community control is revoked, the judge may impose any sentence which it might have originally imposed before placing the offender on community control. An offender on community control may be ordered to be confined to his or her residence while not at work or engaged in public service activities.⁴ The Department of Correction can also electronically monitor an offender sentenced to community control.⁵

Electronic Monitoring: The department uses radio frequency (RF) electronic monitoring and Global Positioning Satellite (GPS) system electronic monitoring as an enhancement to community control supervision. RF monitors provide a means to determine if an offender leaves his or her residence without authorization, but cannot report the offender’s location outside of the residence. GPS monitors continuously track an offender’s movements and report if an offender leaves an “inclusion zone” or enters an “exclusion zone.” These zones are established according to the circumstances of the individual case. With active GPS systems, violations are immediately reported to an on-call officer for investigation and resolution. Passive GPS systems record the same information, but report only once a day instead of continuously.

⁴ s. 948.03(2), F.S.

⁵ s. 948.03(3), F.S.

As of January 31, 2003, 200 community controllees were on RF monitors and 382 were monitored by GPS systems. In total, this is approximately 5 percent of the community control population.

Section 948.03(3)(a)1, F.S., gives the department the discretion to place community controllees on electronic monitoring. However, in State v. Carson, 531 So.2d 1069 (Fla. 4th Dist., 1988), the Fourth District Court of Appeals specifically found that an offender's failure to submit to electronic monitoring ordered by the department could not be a basis for revocation of community control. As a result of this case and other decisions prohibiting revocation of probation or community control for violation of conditions not imposed by the sentencing court, the department does not exercise its discretion to require electronic monitoring.

Statutory Ineligibility for Community Control: An offender may not be placed on community control if the offender has been convicted or had a adjudication withheld for a forcible felony and has a previous conviction or a withhold of adjudication for a forcible felony⁶. The following offenses are forcible felonies: treason; murder; sexual battery; carjacking; home-invasion robbery; robbery; arson; kidnapping; aggravated assault; aggravated battery; aggravated stalking; aircraft piracy; unlawful throwing, placing, or discharging of a destructive device or bomb; and any other felony which involves the use or threat of physical force or violence against any individual.⁷

Despite the statutory prohibition against placing forcible felons on community control, the Department of Corrections reports that as of November 30, 2002, it was supervising 293 offenders who are statutorily ineligible for community control supervision. In all cases, these offenders were placed on community control by order of the sentencing court.

Involvement of Senator Howard Futch: The late Senator Howard E. Futch, then Chairman of the Senate's Committee on Criminal Justice, became aware of concerns about crimes committed by offenders on community control. On January 7, 2003, Senator Futch sent a letter to William Evers, Chairman of the Florida Corrections Commission, requesting that the Commission conduct an analysis of the community control program in order to assist the Legislature in developing legislative action. Senator Futch cited news reports about public safety concerns as well as the ineligible offenders. On March 17, 2003, the Commission filed a report entitled "A Review of the Community Control Program and Electronic Monitoring within the Florida Department of Corrections". The major findings were outlined in the executive summary of the report as follows:

- Community control is but one of several community based sanctions that are authorized by current statutory provisions.
- A relatively small number of offenders are placed on community control who are statutorily ineligible (approximately three percent of total community control population).
- Reasons for placement of ineligible offenders on community control vary in light of a very large and complex judicial system. A more complete analysis of reasons was limited by time constraints.
- The Department of Corrections is adequately funded for the supervision of the community control population at a caseload ration of 25 offenders to one officer. The allocation of positions for the supervision of the community control population is in need of constant review and change.
- The Department of Corrections has extensive policy and procedure in place for the operation of the community control program. Emphasis is placed on officer compliance to standards designed to ensure frequent contact with offenders by officers. Recent changes in policy should help further ensure that contacts with offenders are being conducted in accordance with established policy.

- The Department of Corrections has conducted research that clearly suggests that the use of electronic monitoring has a positive public safety impact. The Department of Correction should continue to conduct additional research that will determine the most cost-effective approach to the use of electronic monitoring upon sufficient data becoming available.
- An increased level of communication among participants in the sentencing process may lead to a better utilization of sentencing options.

Requirements contained in CS/HB 1273: The first section of the bill provides that the act shall be known as the "Senator Howard Futch Act". CS/HB 1273 amends section 948.10 to provide that if an offender is sentenced to community control by the court and the offender is statutorily ineligible to be placed on community control because of forcible felony convictions, the department shall:

1. Review and verify whether an ineligible offender was placed on community control.
2. Notify the sentencing judge, state attorney, and the Attorney General that the offender was ineligible for placement on community control within 30 days of receipt of the order.
3. Provide a quarterly report to the chief judge and state attorney of each circuit regarding the number of ineligible offenders placed on community control.
4. Provide an annual report to the Governor, Senate, House of Representatives, and Supreme Court on the placement of ineligible offenders on community control in order to assist in preparing judicial education programs.

Based on a similar recommendation contained in the Corrections Commission report, the committee substitute adds a subsection to s. 921.187 which relates to alternatives to the disposition of criminal cases. The subsection repeats the language already contained in s. 948.01 which prohibits the placement of an offender on community control if the offender is convicted of a forcible felony and has a previous conviction for a forcible felony.

The committee substitute requires DOC to develop and maintain a weighted statewide equalization strategy designed to ensure that high-risk offenders receive the highest level of supervision. The committee substitute also requires the department to develop and implement a supervision risk assessment instrument for the community control population which is similar to the probation risk assessment instrument established by the National Institute of Justice.

The committee substitute requires DOC to include in its annual report a detailed analysis of the community control program including a list of specific information. The committee substitute also requires DOC to study the use of electronic monitoring and its effectiveness on the community control population and to report the findings to the Governor, the Senate and the House of Representatives by February 1, 2004. For purposes of the study, the committee substitute authorizes the department to adjust the maximum community control caseloads when electronic monitoring is used from July 1, 2003 until February 1, 2004.

C. SECTION DIRECTORY:

Section 1: Providing that act shall be known by the popular name the "Senator Howard Futch Act".

Section 2: Amends s. 921.187, F.S.; provides that certain offenses disqualify an offender from placement on community control.

Section 3: Amending s. 948.10; requires DOC to take specified action if ineligible offender placed on community control.

Section 4: Requires DOC to study the use of electronic monitoring and effectiveness of community control.

Section 5: Providing an effective date.

II. FISCAL ANALYSIS & ECONOMIC IMPACT STATEMENT

IV. AMENDMENTS/COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTE CHANGES

As originally filed, HB 1273 required DOC to notify the correctional probation officer assigned to supervise the offender in cases in which an ineligible offender was placed on community control. The bill required the officer to monitor the offender carefully. If possible, the department was to seek a modification of the offender's sentence to provide for greater surveillance, monitoring or confinement. The bill also required DOC to notify the sentencing judge and file quarterly and annual reports regarding the placement of ineligible offenders on community control.

The Subcommittee on Corrections recommended the adoption of a strike-all amendment which contained the following modifications:

- Based on a similar recommendation contained in the Corrections Commission report, the amendment added a subsection to s. 921.187 which relates to alternatives to the disposition of criminal cases. The subsection repeats the language already contained in s. 948.01 which prohibits the placement of an offender on community control if the offender has been convicted of a forcible felony and has a previous conviction for a forcible felony.
- The amendment altered the provisions of the original bill relating to the procedure that the department is to use if it finds that an ineligible offender has been placed on community control. Under the amendment, this procedure will be followed in all cases in which an ineligible offender is placed on community control, not only cases in which the offender was sentenced as part of a plea agreement.
- The amendment removed language that would have required the department to seek modification of the offender's sentence. There did not appear to be a mechanism by which the department, who is generally not a party to the proceedings, could seek modification of a sentence after it is imposed. Further, concerns were raised that resentencing an offender could raise double jeopardy concerns.
- In addition to a requirement that the department notify the sentencing judge, the amendment required the department to notify the state attorney and the Attorney General that the offender was ineligible. The amendment retained the quarterly reporting requirements and provided that the annual report relating to the placement of ineligible offenders on community control will be sent to the Governor, the Senate and the House of Representatives in addition to being sent to the Supreme Court.
- The amendment required DOC to develop and maintain a weighted statewide equalization strategy designed to ensure that high-risk offenders receive the highest level of supervision. The amendment also required the department to develop and implement a supervision risk assessment instrument for the community control population which is similar to the probation risk assessment instrument established by the National Institute of Justice.
- The amendment required DOC to include in its annual report a detailed analysis of the community control program including a list of specific information.
- The amendment also required DOC to study the use of electronic monitoring and its effectiveness on the community control population and to report the findings to the Governor, the Senate and the House of Representatives. For purposes of the study, the amendment authorized the department to adjust the maximum community control caseloads when electronic monitoring is used from July 1, 2003 until February 1, 2004.
