SUMMARY ANALYSIS

Present law authorizes any party to bring a civil action against an insurer if such party is damaged by an insurer's "bad faith." An insurer acts in bad faith when it does not attempt in good faith to settle claims when under the circumstances, it could have had it acted fairly and honestly toward its insured and with due regard to his or her interest.

The bill provides:

- Specific statutory standards for a bad faith claim against an insurer and replaces any related common law causes of action currently available in Florida.
- That a bad faith claim arises where the insurer acts in gross disregard of the insured's interest by failing to accept a good faith written demand to settle within policy limits.
- That only an insured person or that person's assignee has a cause of action under the bill, thus eliminating a direct cause of action brought by a third-party claimant against an insurer without an assignment from the insured.
- That in a bad faith action arising out of failure to settle with a third-party claimant, the insurer's duty to offer policy limits does not arise unless a plaintiff shows that during settlement negotiations the third party submitted a detailed written demand to settle with the insurer within policy limits that meets criteria specified in the bill.
- A process for insurers to facilitate settlement within policy limits in the event of multiple third-party claims.

The bill provides evidentiary standards for bad faith cases, stating that an insurer does not have a fiduciary relationship with a first-party claimant and retains the right to protect privileged work product. With respect to third-party claims, the insurer's work product is immune from discovery until the underlying claim for payment on the insurance policy is final.

The bill prohibits the inclusion of a multiplier or enhancement with an award for attorneys' fees and costs and limits damages recoverable in bad faith actions involving uninsured motorist coverage to two times the policy limits.

This bill does not appear to have a fiscal impact on state or local governments.

I. SUBSTANTIVE ANALYSIS

A. EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES:

Obligations of Insurer to Insured

An insurer generally owes two major contractual duties to its insured in exchange for premium payments—the duty to indemnify and the duty to defend.¹ The duty to indemnify refers to the insurer's obligation to issue payment either to the insured or a beneficiary on a valid claim.² The duty to defend refers to the insurer's duty to provide a defense for the insured in court against a third party with respect to a claim within the scope of the insurance contract.³

Statutory and Common Law Bad Faith

Florida courts for many years have recognized an additional duty that does not arise directly from the contract, the common law duty of good faith on the part of an insurer to the insured in negotiating settlements with third-party claimants.⁴ Additionally, a Florida statute, enacted in 1982, recognizes a claim for bad faith against an insurer not only in the instance of settlement negotiations with a third party, but also for an insured seeking payment from his or her own insurance company.⁵

The statute provides that any party has a claim and defines bad faith on the part of the insurer as:

- Not attempting in good faith to settle claims when, under all the circumstances, it could and should have done so, had it acted fairly and honestly toward its insured with due regard for her or his interests;
- Making claims payments to insureds or beneficiaries not accompanied by a statement setting forth the coverage under which payments are being made; or
- Except as to liability coverages, failing to promptly settle claims, when the obligation to settle the claim has become reasonably clear, under one portion of the insurance policy coverage in order to influence settlements under other portions of the insurance policy coverage.⁶

In interpreting what it means for an insurer to act fairly toward its insured, Florida courts have held that when the insured's liability is clear and an excess judgment is likely due to the extent of the resulting damage, the insurer has an affirmative duty to initiate settlement negotiations.⁷ If a settlement is not reached, the insurer has the burden of showing that there was no realistic possibility of settlement within policy limits.⁸ Failure to settle on its own, however, does not mean that an insurer acts in bad faith, because liability may be unclear or damage minimal. Negligent failure to settle does not rise to the level of bad faith. Negligence may be considered by the jury because it is relevant to the question of bad faith, but a cause of action based solely on negligence does not lie.⁹

In order to bring a bad faith claim under the statute, a plaintiff must first give the insurer 60 days' written notice of the alleged violation.¹⁰ The insurer has 60 days after the required notice is filed to pay the damages or correct the circumstances giving rise to the violation.¹¹ Because first-party claims are only statutory, that cause of action does not exist until the 60-day curing period provided in the statute expires without payment by the insurer.¹² Third-party claims, on the other hand, exist both in statute and at common law, so the insurer cannot guarantee avoidance of a bad faith claim by curing within the statutory period.¹³

First- and Third-Party Claims

A first-party bad faith claim occurs when an insured sues his or her insurer claiming that the insurer refused to settle the insured's own claim in good faith.¹⁴ A common example of a first-party bad faith claim is when an insured is involved in an accident with an uninsured motorist and does not reach a settlement with his or her own uninsured motorist liability carrier for costs associated with the accident.¹⁵ Before a first-party bad faith claim was recognized in statute, Florida courts rejected such claims because the insured is not exposed to liability and thus there is no fiduciary duty on the part of the insurer like there is when a third party is involved.¹⁶ An insured's claim against the insurer does not accrue until the conclusion of the underlying litigation for contractual benefits.¹⁷ The action against the insurer must be resolved in favor of the insured,¹⁸ because the insured cannot allege bad faith if it is not shown that the insurer should have paid the claim.

In a first-party action, there is never a fiduciary relationship between the parties, but an arm's length contractual one based on the insurance contract. At the time of the action itself, the insurer and the insured are adverse parties, but the nature of the claim raises complicated issues relating to the availability of certain evidence for discovery. Bad faith cases create unique issues during discovery because there are necessarily two separate phases of litigation—first regarding the underlying insurance claim and second regarding the bad faith claim. The Florida Supreme Court has held that first-party bad faith claimants are entitled to discovery of all materials contained in the underlying claim and related litigation file up to the date of the resolution of the underlying claim, which is the same as the standard for third-party claims.¹⁹ The Court reasoned that insurers are required to produce claim file materials regardless of whether they may be considered work product because they are generally the only source of direct evidence on the central issue of the insurance company's handling of the insured's claim.²⁰ In general, adverse parties are not compelled to produce materials prepared in anticipation of litigation without a showing to the court that the party seeking discovery needs the materials to prepare his or her case and cannot obtain the equivalent by other means without undue hardship.²¹ Although plaintiffs are not required to make such a showing under Florida law for the contents of the claim file, they are required to do so in order to compel production of materials in preparation of the bad faith claim itself.²²

A third-party bad faith claim arises when an insurer fails in good faith to settle a third-party's claim against the insured within policy limits, thus exposing the insured to liability in excess of his or her insurance coverage.²³ A third-party claim can be brought by the insured, having been held liable for judgment in excess of policy limits by the third-party claimant,²⁴ or it can be brought by the third party either directly or through an assignment of the insured's rights.²⁵ Florida courts have interpreted s. 624.155, F.S., as authorizing a direct third-party claim because the statute makes an action available to "any party."²⁶ However, because a cause of action under s. 624.155, F.S., is predicated on the failure of the insurer to act "fairly and honestly toward its insured," the duty only runs to the insured; no such duty is owed by the insurance company to a third-party claimant.²⁷ Therefore, unless there is a judgment in excess of policy limits against the insured, "a third-party plaintiff cannot demonstrate that the insurer breached a duty toward its insured."²⁸

In third-party cases, it is important to note that when the insured brings such a claim, there is a shift in the relationship between the insured and the insurer from the time when the underlying insurance contract is at issue and when the bad faith claim is brought. During settlement negotiations and any subsequent legal actions incident to the insurance claim, the insurer is acting pursuant to its contractual duties to indemnify and defend the insured. Upon filing a claim for bad faith, the insurer and insured become adverse.

When the insured brings a bad faith claim after being held liable to a third party in excess of policy limits, the insurer owes no duty to the insured because they are adverse parties at that point. However, even though the posture of the parties in a bad faith case is adverse, it is the insurer's behavior during the time when it was acting under a duty to the insured that is examined by courts. The Florida Supreme Court has defined the insurer's duty to the insured as a "fiduciary obligation to protect its insured from a judgment exceeding the limits of the insurance policy."²⁹ A fiduciary obligation is a high standard, which requires the insurer "to use the same degree of care and diligence as a person of ordinary care and prudence should exercise in the management of his own business."³⁰ In light of this heightened duty on the part of the insurer, Florida courts focus on the actions of the insurer, not the claimant.³¹ Although the focus in a bad faith case is on the conduct of the insurer, the conduct of the claimant is not entirely ignored, because it is relevant to whether there was a realistic opportunity for settlement.³² A court, for example, will look at the terms of a demand for settlement to determine if the insurer was given a reasonable amount of time to investigate the claim and make a decision whether settlement would be appropriate under the circumstances. One court held that dismissal of a bad faith claim was proper where the settlement demand in question gave a 10-day window, pointing out that "[i]n view of the short space of time between the accident and institution of suit, the provision of the offer to settle limiting acceptance to ten days made it virtually impossible to make an intelligent acceptance."³³ Although in this particular circumstance the court found that 10 days was not enough, it is not clear exactly what time period or other conditions for acceptance would be permissible, because courts look at the facts on a case-by-case basis and the current statute is silent on this point.

Effect of the Bill: Common Law & Statutory Remedies

The bill creates specific statutory standards for a bad faith claim against an insurer and replaces any related common law causes of action currently available in Florida, making the statute as revised by the bill the exclusive remedy.

The bill specifies that a bad faith claim arises where the insurer acts in gross disregard of the insured's interest by failing to accept a good faith written demand to settle within policy limits. The bill provides that only an insured person or that person's assignee has a cause of action under the bill. If the claim is for a third-party claim, the insurer does not violate the duty of good faith if the claimant did not provide a demand to settle which:

- Is in writing, signed by the third party claimant or the claimant's authorized representative and delivered to the insurer and the insured;
- States that it is a demand to settle made pursuant to this section;
- States a specified amount within the insured's policy limits which the third party claimant offers to settle its claim in full and to release the insured from liability
- It is limited to one claimant and one line of coverage, or if not, separately designates a demand for each claimant and each line of coverage, each of which may be accepted independently;
- Is submitted by a person having legal authority to accept payment and to execute the release;
- Does not contain any conditions for acceptance other than payment of the specific amount demanded; and
- Includes a detailed explanation of the coverage and liability issues and the facts giving rise to the claim, including:
 1. An explanation of injuries and damages claimed;
 2. The names of known witnesses; and
 3. A listing or copy of all relevant documents including medical records. The third party claimant has a duty to supplement this information as it becomes available.

The bill provides that the insurer does not violate the statutory good faith requirement if within 60 days after the insurer's receipt of the demand or within 90 days of the receipt of the claim (whichever is later) offers to pay the amount requested or the policy limits. The bill provides the insurer with an affirmative defense if the third-party claimant or the insured fail to fully cooperate in providing all relevant information.

The bill also provides a process for insurers to facilitate settlement within policy limits in the event of multiple third-party claims arising out of a single occurrence totaling more than policy limits. In this situation, the bill specifies that the insurer is not liable beyond policy limits if within 90 days of the notice of competing claims, the insurer files an interpleader³⁴ to join competing claims and distribute policy limits on a prorated basis or makes policy limits available to the claimants through binding arbitration. Bad faith is not automatically presumed under this section if the insurer does not accept a demand to settle for policy limits, pay an appraisal award for damage to property, or file an interpleader.

The bill contains evidentiary standards for bad faith cases, providing that an insurer does not have a fiduciary relationship with a first-party claimant and retains the right to protect privileged work product. The bill provides that the privileged claim file will be produced upon a showing by the insured that he or she needs the materials to prepare the case and cannot obtain the equivalent by other means without undue hardship.³⁵ This provision provides that the claim file is to be considered work product and creates a distinction between first- and third-party claims in regard to discovery of the file. With respect to third-party claims, the insurer's work product under the bill is immune from discovery until the underlying claim for payment on the insurance policy is final. Thereafter, discovery is to be determined under the Florida Rules of Civil Procedure as described above.

The bill also prohibits the inclusion of a multiplier or enhancement with an award for attorneys' fees and costs and limits damages recoverable in bad faith actions involving uninsured motorist coverage to two times the policy limits.

Finally, the bill contains a severability provision stating that if any portion is held invalid, that invalidity will not affect other valid portions.
